Psychiatric Provider — Competitor brief for Alex McCabe

Blank Slate Therapy · Directory prototype · Oct 29, 2026

What Psychology Today does well

Psychology Today is still the default place people look for a therapist or psychiatrist. Clients can filter by city, specialty, insurance, and more. Clinicians pay about $29.95/month with no contract. It already has group-practice profile pages with an “Our Team” section.

Where group practices lose

On Psychology Today, each clinician effectively owns the lead. When someone leaves, inquiries tied to their personal listing leave with them. Search still surfaces individuals more than practices. Openings are free text, so a practice page can say “immediate openings” while one clinician is tagged “not accepting new clients.” There is no shared intake that routes a new client to whoever on the team fits and is free.

What this prototype does instead

• Practice-level retention — the practice is the account holder; every clinician listing ties back to the practice so leads stay with Blank Slate when staff changes.

• Structured openings — next opening date plus last-confirmed date; anything not confirmed within 30 days is flagged as possibly out of date (not free-text availability).

• Shared intake routing — one request form for the practice that assigns to the best-fit clinician with a verified opening.

• Group-practice pages — full team on one page; clients book the practice, not a single person.

• Specialty-by-city pages — e.g. EMDR in Frisco, play therapy in McKinney — built for search and local discovery.

• One-sentence search — “I’m looking for therapy focused on…, in…, with a solo or group practice that takes…” plus specialty chips.

About psychiatricprovider.com

The domain was registered May 2025 (GoDaddy) and currently forwards to zalfi.org, so it is already under your control. It can brand a psychiatry-focused product or specialty directory later. psychology.com is a separate site (tests + a smaller directory), not Psychology Today.

How to use the demo

The live link is a clickable prototype with sample clinicians and practices only. Buttons and forms work; nothing is sent to a real inbox yet. Use it to react to naming, layout, specialties, openings, and the practice sign-up flow — then we harden the backend.

Sources include Psychology Today’s join/pricing pages, live group-practice examples, ClearHealthCosts (Mar 2026), clinician discussions on Reddit, Trustpilot reviews, and ChoosingTherapy directory reviews. This brief is for product planning, not legal advice.